Hans-Peter Studer, Geoffrey Douch : Vaccination: A Guide for Making Personal Choices before purchasing it in order to gauge whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Vaccination: A Guide for Making Personal Choices:

Many parents are content to follow official recommendations about vaccination, while others avoid any vaccinations at all for their children. This little guide helps parents arrive at their own informed conclusion, based on clear, factual information. The authors explain the levels of danger for various diseases and explain how different kinds of vaccinations work, exploring their benefits as well as possible risks. This is the second edition of this useful handbook for parents, fully revised and updated with the latest guidelines and recommendations.

'By giving unbiased recommendations and considerations for each vaccine or combination of vaccines, this book will leave parents feeling empowered when it comes to making their own decisions, often flying in the face of conventional medicine and expectations.' -- Juno, Summer 2010 'Coherent and intelligent. This book is a veritable gem of fact, thoughtful discussion and suggestions of possible variations depending upon the child's circumstances. This is the best type of publication I have read on this subject, as it is factually accurate and unbiased. I would certainly recommend it.' -- Sandra Goodman PhD, Positive Health, October 2004 'The book contains the complete UK childhood vaccination schedule describing the illness, the vaccine, failure and side effects, then a section on recommendations and considerations. An excellent book for parents making vaccination decisions.' -- Scientific and Medical Network , January 2005 'Offers differentiated, critical summaries of the arguments surrounding vaccination. Cautions against making a choice based on fear and encourages parents to take the time to find out all the information they need before being rushed into a decision.' -- The Green Parent, December 2004
